

Translate into Latin.

1) When the sun was rising, Hannibal, intending to commit battle without the smallest delay, led onto the plain his whole army, which had been well prepared to fight for many days.

sol, solis (m) orior, oriri - to rise committo, committere, commisi, commissus proelium, -ii (n) sine + abl. minimus, a, um mora, -ae (f) duco, ducere, duxi, ductus campus, campi (m) exercitus, -us (m) totus, a, um paro (1) to prepare ad + acc pugno (1) dies, diei (m)

2) With you alive, Caesar, there will be no hope of liberty for our republic. Certain citizens are going to kill you within a few days in the Theater of Pompeius Magnus.

vivus, a, um nullus, a, um spes, spei (f) libertas, libertatis (f) Res Publica quidam, quaedam, quoddam interficio, interficere, interfeci, interfectus pauci, -ae, a theatrum, -i (n)

3) When Carthage had been taken, the Scipio Aemilianus destroyed it without any mercy for the citizens defending its walls. Carthago, Carthaginis (f) capio, capere, cepi, captus deleo, delere, deleui, deletus sine ullus, a, um clementia, -ae (f) defendo, defendere murus, -i (m) civis, civis (m)

4) When Cn, Cornelius Lentulus L. Mummius were consuls, Roman legions, led by Scipio Aemilianus destroyed Carthage, a city which had been founded by queen Dido herself, after her husband had had been killed.

5) When an occasion for war had been found, the Romans, sending three legions to Africa, prepared themselves to destroy its walls.

6) This war must be waged by Scipio in order that he may free this republic from the fear of all advancing enemies.

7) These three books must be ready by you all in order that you may become wiser than Cicero himself. Are you yourself intending to read them?